Nowadays, many cities, such as Bogotá and Valencia, are limiting cars in their centres. In my opinion, this is a good idea, although it also has some drawbacks. To begin with, fewer cars mean cleaner air and less noise. As a result, residents can walk and cycle more safely. Moreover, children can play outside without danger. On the other hand, some shop owners worry that customers will stop coming if they cannot park nearby. Furthermore, people with reduced mobility may find it hard to reach the centre. However, these problems can be solved with good public transport and special permits. In my view, the benefits clearly outweigh the disadvantages. In conclusion, restricting traffic makes cities healthier and more pleasant, provided that alternatives are available.
